last night. Less noise might have been made by a much larger company. Yet the large audience seemed thoroughly to enjoy it.

Desana's Leonora was not as satisfying as her Aida. Her singing lacks variety. Then her repetition of some half a dozen arm movements to express emotion grows monotonous. But she has both voice and youth and her art should grow.

Samollov made a good Manrico, singing and acting well. Paccini was a trucculent Count who dearly loved the footlights. Bozzano was a capable Fernando. The Azucena of Canzio was not a thrilling impersonation.

The chorus sang lustily and well, but Formari permitted the orchestra to be blatant.
